ABOUT NICK:

Nick's life reads like a modern-day "Forest Gump" tale. His father was the American 'M' in the CIA, stationed in London, with neighbors including a Supreme Court Justice and an NFL legend who once led the league in rushing and won the NFL Player of the Year award named after him. Nick himself faced rejection from eight NFL teams 11 times before becoming the NFL's most accurate kicker and the all-time leading scorer for the Kansas City Chiefs.

Beyond sports, he served as a legislative aide in the U.S. Senate and worked in the White House under four presidents, focusing on national service. He's instrumental in founding organizations like AmeriCorps, Native Vision, and Champions for the Homeless. Currently, he leads Project Max, aimed at eradicating racism through sports. A Harvard and Dartmouth alumnus, Nick teaches how to harness success for spiritual, physical, and emotional growth, transcending cultural divides.
